The West Virginia Department of Education (WVDE) takes very seriously its responsibilities to protect students’ sensitive information. If you believe that your child’s (or your own) education records have been released improperly or in a way that is not consistent with federal, state, or local laws and policies, please report your concerns to the WVDE Office of Legal Services and Accountability (OLSA). The structured form WVDE has developed will allow you to provide the information we need to begin investigating any privacy incidents or breaches that may have occurred at your school or district. Education Records (also Student Records)

Education records, which may also be called student records, are the official records kept or maintained by a school or school district that directly relate to a student. Education records may include information such as enrollment and attendance records, class grades and grade point average (GPA), course enrollment and completion, disciplinary incidents, honors or awards, special education information (if applicable), achievement test results, and so on. Education records do not include, however, information or notes that an educator keeps for their own personal use that are not accessible to anyone else except a temporary substitute (such as notes a teacher might take to remind themselves about students' interests or unique learning styles). See the definitions section of FERPA for more a more detailed description of what types of records are and are not considered "education records."

Student Data

As defined in West Virginia's Student DATA Act, student data are pieces of information that are included in students' education records and that are collected at an individual level and that may be reported at the individual level as well.

Directory Information

Directory information includes some of the information found within student records; directory information is not generally considered harmful or an invasion of privacy if it is released or disclosed. Directory information may include a student names, addresses, phone numbers, dates and places of birth, major fields of study, participation in officially-recognized activities, height and weight of student athletes, dates of attendance, graduate/non-graduate designations, degrees and awards received, most recent previous schools attended, and photographs. This information can be released for school-related purposes without explicit consent. Each year, every district in West Virginia must publish a list of the types of information considered "directory information,” and parents (or eligible students) must be given an opportunity to opt out of sharing any or all of that information.

Social Security Numbers and state-assigned student identification numbers used in the West Virginia Education Information System (WVEIS) are never considered directory information.

Personally Identifiable Information (PII)

Personally identifiable information (also called PII), includes data that can be used to directly identify a student. PII includes data such as students’ names, names of parents/guardians or other family members, addresses, Social Security Numbers, WVEIS numbers, and other indirect identifiers like date and place of birth or their mothers’ maiden names. Other information might also be considered PII if a reasonable member of the school community could use it—either alone or in combination with other data—to identify a specific student a moderate degree of confidence.

Confidential Student Information

Confidential student information, as defined in the West Virginia Student DATA Act, consists of specific information about a student’s history, family, and other matters that is considered highly personal and should not be disclosed; most categories of confidential student information, as defined in state law, should not be included in students’ education records. Information about students that is considered to be confidential includes religious affiliation; personal or family ownership of firearms; medical, psychological, or behavioral diagnoses; criminal history of the student, their parents, their siblings, or other family members; vehicle registration and driver’s license numbers; biometric and genetic information; and consumer credit history and credit score.

Parent/Guardian

When parents are divorced, separated, or not living together, schools may give access to both parents unless there is a court order, divorce decree, custody agreement, or other legal document on file limiting one parent’s access rights.

A parent or guardian is a student’s mother or father or the adult who has the responsibility and legal authority to care for a minor child. Parents/guardians manage and protect a student’s best interests and act as their legal representatives. Parents/guardians must be given reasonable access to review their children’s educational records and request that corrections be made if errors are discovered. Generally, parents/guardians must be asked to give their consent prior to the release of any information about their child.

Student

A student is a person (in this context, most often a minor child) who has attended a public elementary or secondary school in West Virginia.

Eligible Student

Schools may still provide parents/guardians with access to the education records of eligible students if the parents/guardians claim the student as a dependent for tax purposes.

An eligible student is any student who has reached 18 years of age (or who is attending a college/university or other postsecondary school regardless of their age) and who is typically legally responsible for his/her own interests. When a student turns 18 years of age, all rights and responsibilities that previously belonged to parents/guardians transfer to the student, including the right to give or withdraw consent for the disclosure of education records.

Consent

Consent generally means permission or agreement. In the context of student data privacy, consent refers to parents'/guardians' (or eligible students') permission for schools or districts to share specific information from student records with a third party (that is, someone who is not the student and parent/guardian or the school). Typically, schools or districts must get consent from a parent/guardian (or eligible student) to share student-level information that is not classified as directory information.

There are some exceptions that allow schools or districts to share information without consent in specific circumstances. For instance, educators or others with a legitimate educational interest may be given access to student records in order to fulfill their job responsibilities. Records may be provided to a new school (including a postsecondary school) in which a student is enrolling. Information about a student may be disclosed to appropriate officials in the event of a health or safety emergency involving the student. School or district officials may also disclose student data in response to a lawfully-issued subpoena. See FERPA Subpart D, sections 30 and 31 for more information about consent requirements and exceptions.

Disclosure

Disclosure, in this context, refers to releasing, sharing, or giving access to information contained in students' education records. Disclosure may take many forms, including verbal, written, or electronic. It is important to note that disclosure here refers only to school or district officials' or representatives' release of student records. WVDE, school districts, and schools do not control and have no authority over what parents/guardians or students disclose about their own child (or themselves).

Authorized and Unauthorized

In this context, authorized refers to individuals or entities who are permitted to have access to students' education records. Authorized individuals or parties might include administrators, teachers, and other school staff with a legitimate educational interest who need access to the data in order to do their jobs; contractors or consultants who are working on behalf of a school, district, or the WVDE to perform essential functions or conduct approved research studies; parents/guardians or eligible students wishing to inspect their child's (or their own) student records; or others who have consent.

Unauthorized parties are those who do not have consent or in other ways should not be permitted to view or access individual students' education records. Unauthorized individuals might include other students or parents in the school or community; researchers who do not have consent or who have not received approval to conduct a study; journalists or bloggers; or other school or district personnel who have neither consent nor a legitimate educational interest in the data.
